WHY SHOULD WE MERGE THE ALGORITHMS?

The largest cause of division in this country is the fact that we all have drastically different information diets. In an age where people spend more time consuming media online than talking to people in real life, you are no longer the sum of the 5 people you surround yourself with, but rather the accounts you follow. Leftists don't understand right-wingers, and vice versa. They're being fed different narratives, values, statistics, and terminology. As an anarchist raised in a socially progressive society, but who leans more socially "conservative" myself, I think I can help bridge this communication disconnect.

The problem is that everybody has different, specially tailored algorithms to feed them drastically different content than everybody else. Here's an idea: What if we merged those algorithmic suggestions together? If I'm an anarchist, and I make a video with a fascist, communist, christian nationalist, or a conservative, and upload it to Youtube, then both of our audiences will see my anarchist views, and have more anarchist content recommended to them. Likewise, my audience will have more content of opposing views recommended to them as well.

It's not like this is late 1910s Russia in civil war, and we all have bayonets against each other in a physical vie for dominance and control, where the fascists are the white army, the communists are the red army, and the anarchists are the black army. No! We are only online commentators and viewers. We're not shooting at each other. We're only keyboard warriors. There is no good reason for us to NOT interact with each other. Online, we have far more in common with each other, as political "extremists", than we do the disproportionally jewish, pedophile, billionaire scum that make up our ruling class, and the even more pathetic lackeys that defend them. We are all brothers! Your average groyper teenager was raised to be against discrimination, with Christian morality, and is of European descent. The same applies to your average anarchist teenager. In fact, the similarities go even deeper. Both were likely raised middle class, couldn't sit still throughout boring k-12 classes, are most likely the "outspoken" ones in their friend group, and hate being told what to do. The same applies to your average communist teenager.

Any young person who cares so much about the society in which he lives, to the point of embracing "political extremism," regardless of the negative social consequences thrust upon him, necessarily holds truth as his highest value. The ruling class does not. We must put an end to needless division online. Gone will be the days where leftists are exclusively fed left-wing content, and right-wingers, right-wing content. Together, everyone will be introduced to everybody else's viewpoints, which will reduce animosity, and help all of us accomplish whatever goals we are aiming for. Social change does not happen with a divided population. With any revolutionary movement, it is a small, dedicated minority that makes that change, with the rest of the population being sympathetic to it, or at least not actively fighting against that minority. Merging our social media algorithms would give us this breathing room. When it comes to that "rest of the population", most "normies" in politics get into politics for cultural reasons, not structural ones. As in, the culture war. The socially progressive bubble must be popped. The race and sex focused ragebait conservative bubble must be popped. Millions, billions even, must see nuance. As we merge the algorithms from the fringes, as "political extremists", we close in on the center: the Overton window.

Some may worry, especially those of marginalized groups, about discrimination when it comes to allying with socially conservative individuals. It is true, that there is a lot of contempt or disdain for certain groups online. However, merging our social media algorithms would reduce that pathological disdain. In addition, everybody is far less extreme when you dive deeper, beyond ideological labels, and into what they truly value. I think everyone is fed up with being a slave. You'll realize that you have far more in common with each other if you choose to speak face to face. Even if you both disagree on, say, the validity of sex transition, you can still work together to accomplish another single, distinct goal. I go into what I propose for this in another video (uploaded soon). You can part ways afterwards, or become friends.

By having everybody exposed to drastically different viewpoints, we will understand each other far better, and do something actually revolutionary. Together, we expose the real enemy: our tailored outrage algorithms.

PART 2) HOW DO WE MERGE THE ALGORITHMS?

I personally cannot merge the algorithms with every person, since many people have and will continue to block me for my stated beliefs, and manner of communicating said beliefs. Therefore, I am going to need help to merge the algorithms. “Merging the algorithms” is a ‘meme’, in the most literal sense of the word. The truth is that when memes start to gain virality, they spread like wildfire, which I’ll give examples of in another video. We only need 4000 dedicated algorithm mergers to change everybody’s For You pages forever. Through enough dedication, we can radically alter the nature of political discourse in less than 5 years. The following are step-by-step instructions on merging the algorithms.

1) Put “algorithm merger”, “merging the algorithms”, or something to that effect in your bio if you use social media. ANYONE can put “algorithm merger” in their bio. It’s the opposite of a term that signals an exclusive group, like “Groypers” where you have to agree with certain ideological positions or be associated with a particular person. A Groyper can be an “algorithm merger”. A Communist can be an “algorithm merger”, and so on. Nobody will know where the phrase “algorithm merger” came from, and it will just look like a quirky thing to put in your bio, but those who have watched this video will know. If in the event people start to catch on that the “algorithm merger” statement is related to me, change it to a quote from one of my videos. It will serve the same function. This will make it easier to do point #2:

2) Speak to those with drastically different viewpoints online, and calmly explain your ideas to them. In growing my twitter profile, I did a mixture of this alongside with being a reply guy. If you are a communist, talk to a fascist. If you are a race realist, talk to a liberal. If you are an ethno-nationalist, talk to a white nationalist. If you are an anarcho-communist, talk to a propertarian. This is effective on a small scale, and WILL add up over time as enough people do so.

3) My videos are one vector for algorithmic merge. Download and post my content on other platforms, focusing on specific ideological echo-chambers like Reddit, Bluesky, Bitchute, or Gab, as notable examples. My videos are empathetic, but clearly controversial in their conclusions in a way that gets both leftists and right-wingers talking to one another. Make similar videos as well, directed toward whoever is opposite to you on the political spectrum in a way that encourages real discussion.

4) Make videos responding to my videos. Discuss your disagreements in a calm, calculated manner. Once again, our audiences of different ideologies will see both of our points of view.

5) I have a plan. A great plan to change the entire culture of the internet. To create a virtuous, intellectual discussion focused culture online for ALL partakers of politics to revel in. Everyone included. I am going to create a “home” online where people can discuss the ideas I put forth in my videos, without me having to be there, and without any requirements to join. A public “home” for the mimetic spread of not only my ideas, but the ideas of whoever interacts with mine. A true, faceless, intellectual marketplace. When I get enough in Monero donations, I am purchasing the domain name and hosting, and revealing the name to all of you. I will keep you all updated on this project and make videos on it. The first video after I acquire sufficient resources will be my requirement analysis for this project.

From this online home, the ideas will spread mimetically. They will travel from home base, onto twitter, and into the news cycle.

6) Clip and share funny screenshots and segments of my videos. Some of them will be hilariously outrageous, and will lead more people to discover my videos.

7) When my audience grows in size, I will eventually lead raids on specific online echo-chambers. I want to focus on reddit first. The way the platform is structured is inherently authoritarian and leads to the largest, THICKEST echo-chambers. I will lead specific raids on certain politically focused subreddits, but even some cultural based ones, because the personal IS political.

8) Translate my videos into other languages and upload them wherever you can. Merging the algorithms requires merging the algorithms across cultures.

By merging the algorithmic suggestions of all young radicals together, we strengthen all revolutionary causes against the status quo, end echo-chambers, and create a new culture that benefits ALL involved.
